

Finding Reliable Health Information

Health information abounds, but it can be difficult to figure out where to start and how to determine information accuracy. This guide, while not exhaustive, provides some resources and tools to access reliable health information.

Medical Professionals

When you have a question about your child's health, their medical and therapy providers are likely the best sources of information. For after-hours, non-emergency questions your provider, local hospital, or insurance company may have a nurse line.

Evaluating Web-Based Health Information

With improvements in technology, it seems that more information is at our fingertips than ever before. Yet how do we, as busy parents, determine if that information is accurate? According to the National Institute of Health (NIH), key questions to ask include:

- Who runs the website?
- What is the original source of the website's information?
- How does the website document the evidence supporting its information?
- How current is the information on the website?

NIH offers additional tools for evaluating health information here.

Online Health Information Resources

Indiana Family to Family offers many up-to-date, topic-specific health information fact sheets and resources available on our website: <https://www.inf2f.org/fact-sheets.html>. You can find additional online health information resources on other websites, such as:

- American Academy of Pediatrics- <https://www.healthychildren.org>
- CDC's Milestone Tracker App is available for Android and Apple
- Kids Health – <https://www.kidshealth.org>
- Lab Tests Online – <https://www.labtestsonline.org>
- MedlinePlus – <https://www.medlineplus.gov>
- NIH Health Information Resources – <https://www.nih.gov/health-information>

Prescription Drug Information

- INF2F Prescription Drug Fact Sheet- <https://www.inf2f.org/fact-sheets.html>
- NIH Daily Med- <https://dailymed.nlm.nih.gov/dailymed/>
- NIH Drug Information Portal- <https://druginfo.nlm.nih.gov/drugportal/>

Library Resources

Your local public librarians can help you access library resources, as well as online databases. Additionally, the following resources are available to all Hoosiers:

- The INSPIRE Lifelong Learning Library for Hoosiers contains a variety of Health and Medicine databases- <https://inspire.in.gov/>
- The Library at the Indiana Institute on Disability and Community sends materials to anyone in the state and provides a variety of online topic guides- <https://www.iidc.indiana.edu/library/>

To learn more about finding reliable health information, contact Indiana Family to Family. We will assist you as you navigate health care systems and services, especially those available to individuals with special health care needs.

844-323-4636
inf2f.org